EXCERPT:

Recording and preserving facts, stories and memories about yourself, family and friends is one of the greatest contributions you can make to future generations. Left undocumented, details become vague or are forgotten over time and treasured memories, values and traditions fall by the wayside. Creating your own tribute stories is both a rewarding and worthwhile process, resulting in a gift of love for family and friends.

Perhaps you plan to develop a tribute story for a special someone or, maybe you hope to compile several stories into a single bound volume to be shared and treasured throughout the years.

No matter what your goal may be, developing a tribute story is no easy task. This endeavor will be a journey involving hours of dedication, organization and research – and that's just the beginning! Once information has been gathered, the story must be shaped and written; preferably in a style that compels others to read it. Then, desktop publishing is applied; incorporating images, color and design. Finally, a means of display or presentation must be selected. Don't allow these challenges to scare you! When your project is complete, you will find the reward well worth the effort.
