"The vulnerability of acne sufferers along side the ever growing greediness of talented marketers aiming at the pockets of acne sufferers is a phenomenon that should be condemned" says Walden.

In his research through the internet, Walden realized there is an abundance of acne cure books pretending to offer drug-free solutions, but in fact are part of the same scam as they provide impractical, vague or often no solutions at all, leaving their frustrated customers with very little support if any.

"Because acne is not a cosmetic problem, but a major sign of system imbalance" says Walden, "a holistic solution handling both internal and external factors leading to acne formation is obligatory".

Due to the complexity of the disease, Walden emphasizes on the importance of providing real-time guidance for acne sufferers by experienced sources in addition to valuable information on how to eliminate acne permanently using pure natural means.

"I wouldn't expect a marketer to coach an acne sufferer through the process of acne treatment, just like I wouldn't trust a plumber to perform a bypass surgery" adds Walden.

Another problem that stands in the way of acne sufferers, According to Walden, is information overload. "Hundreds of acne treatment books clutter the Internet, causing confusion and forcing acne sufferers to become very shrewd and discriminating consumers" ,Says Walden.

"The idea of offering free personal counseling to my customers was born out of the necessity to provide extra value by adapting the program to the sufferer's individual needs and limitations, to navigate the acne sufferer through the maze of conflicting theories and misleading information and supply the need for human interaction during the treatment.'

The best selling Acne No More book, which had already helped thousands of sufferers worldwide to overcome their disease, offers a proven yet simple and straightforward program anyone can follow, at any age and in any level of severity.

In a message to Walden, Ben Mitchell a 38 years old from British Columbia, Canada, writes: "I was curious to know, being the bitter skeptic that I am, what could your program offer that I haven't yet tried. I've tried every product and prescription, available online and offline, and yours was the only method that worked for me...I'm 38 and finally have clear skin!"
