Dataleach Data Recovery Changes Name to SalvageData Recovery Inc in Order to Spotlight The company's Primary Objective: Salvaging Data

Data Dataleach Data Recovery launches new name SalvageData Recovery Inc to emphasize its primary mission of saving lost data.

Stamford, CT (PRWEB) May 1, 2006 Dataleach Data Recovery has filed to rename the company, SalvageData Recovery Inc. Although the name has been changed, the mission remains the same. The new name will help to better establish corporate identity as SalvageData looks to expand sales of existing data recovery services and data recovery software products in the US and abroad.

According to founder and CEO Ralph Pierre, "As we look to expand to other markets with forthcoming data recovery software and critical network storage management solutions and tools, we changed the name to help establish a world-class recognizable brand that is synonymous with the services and products that we offer."

In addition to the new company name, SalvageData Recovery Inc has updated their web site. The new web site refreshes the corporate identity and builds upon the goal of broadening the company's spectrum of services. SalvageData's web address has been changed to www.salvagedata.com. Revamped with a new look and easier navigation, the new site continues to illustrate the company's burgeoning strengths in rescuing lost data.

Founded in 1998 and headquartered in Stamford, CT, SalvageData Recovery Inc is a leading provider in world-class data salvaging and recovery services for damaged, downed or inaccessible computer and electronic storage media devices. The company services individuals, government agencies, and organizations of all sizes that experience data loss.
