

Changing Real Estate Environment Turns BiggerPockets.com into Indispensable Resource

Website BiggerPockets.com Real Estate Investing Community provides a “one stop shop” of real estate information for buyers, sellers, and investors.

Sherman Oaks, CA (PRWEB) August 1, 2006 -- A dynamic and increasingly challenging real estate environment presents buyers sellers and investors alike with new and unique opportunities, making the popular Real Estate Investing web site BiggerPockets.com (<http://www.biggerpockets.com>) an indispensable tool. BiggerPockets relies on the knowledge of its community of users to facilitate better informed real estate deals.

With interest rates climbing rapidly and the real estate market slowing in many parts of the country, being an informed buyer, seller or investor is an absolute must. BiggerPockets provides its users with both the analytical and practical tools required to cut through the fog of misinformation often found on other sites.

Since its inception in 2004, BiggerPockets has seen steady growth in users, mostly by positive word of mouth. “Users enjoy their experience on our site and like that BiggerPockets is a one stop shop for real estate,” says Joshua Dorkin, founder and president. “I started the site because I want to give people valuable real estate information; I am overwhelmed by the amount of positive feedback I constantly receive about the site.”

“Just thought I would thank everyone who contributes their knowledge to the site, as it will help investors grow more wealth, and success....” Is typical of the testimonials BiggerPockets receives on its site every day. With an eclectic audience interested in all aspects of real estate, BiggerPockets covers topics including the changing housing market, buying foreclosures, dealing with landlords/tenants, investor psychology, lending, credit reports, and much more.

BiggerPockets is, like the real estate market itself, ever changing and evolving, and plans to soon unveil useful new tools for its users.
