Cynapse brings Web 2.0 to the Enterprise

"Sign up to cyn.in", says Cynapse, to build all your information online and get your organization centrally connected. cyn.in is a web based service that enables the enterprise to build, collaborate, manage and publish: knowledge, documents, media and files, all within hosted sub-systems.

Wilmington, DE (PRWEB) -- September 7, 2006 Cynapse announces cyn.in, their upcoming enterprise information management web service for small, medium and large businesses. With cyn.in, organizations can effortlessly manage and collaborate upon knowledge and build a secure central repository of information and files. Teams across geographical locations can seamlessly work together on the same documents or content and discuss upon them. cyn.in is a 4th generation product and replaces Cynapse's previous product, Amieo.

The announcement, a video tour, is now published at the newly launched site

About cyn.in cyn.in is a Software-as-a-Service offering from Cynapse, intended to be a rapid adoption, off the shelf product for collaborative knowledge and information management.

cyn.in (pronounced: "sign-in") empowers teams, companies or communities to manage, organize, store, version, search through, collaborate & discuss upon, share and publish any kind of information or data. cyn.in will be provided as a secure, managed service, over a monthly subscription model.

cyn.in integrates new age AJAX and Flex technologies, providing a super-usable system, which promises a learning curve of less than 3 hours. The cyn.in infrastructure is capable of hundreds of thousands of hosted sub-systems or sites.

cyn.in inherits its stability and scalability from its predecessor Amieo, which still hosts thousands of community and portal systems for Cynapse's existing customers.

cyn.in is currently being tested and used live by a few select clients of Cynapse, and is scheduled to launch within the next month.
