Myartspace extends community reach by launching one of the most comprehensive collections of interviews with emerging and established artists.

New York, NY. December 17, 2006 – myartspace, the rapidly growing online community for emerging artists, established artists and photographers, has announced a launch of myartspace interviews. The site, myartspace.com/interviews, holds one of the most comprehensive collections of interviews with emerging and established visual artists.

Brian Sherwin, Senior Contributing Editor at myartspace and manager of the myartspace blog is spearheading the interview efforts.

Catherine McCormack-Skiba, co-founder and creative director of myartspace adds, "Brian brings an incredible burst of energy, creativity and thought leadership to the art community at myartspace. He seeks answers to complex and debatable topics; he unearths the interesting elements of artists' lives through his interview series: Space Talk. We are very fortunate and happy to have Brian on our leadership team. His interviews are a great forum for artists to raise their awareness level and for our growing community to be aware of them."

Myartspace intends to open the doors to its video broadcasting studio in New York City in April of 2007. "Our video broadcasting studio in New York will allow us to introduce high-quality interviews with the world's most influential artists as they regularly attend gallery openings here. We hope to open additional broadcasting studios in San Francisco, London, Seoul and Mumbai over the next 12 months." notes Catherine McCormack-Skiba. The myartspace video broadcasting studio will be producing high-quality High Definition content for the Internet and traditional broadcast media.
