Making the Case for Jobcasting

How podcasting your jobs can build your employment brand and take your recruiting to the next level.

INTRODUCTION

Jobcasting is the process of podcasting your job openings and marketing your employment brand.

With the spread of iPods growing by leaps and bounds, podcasting is becoming an effective tool to reach the next generation of job seekers – the iPod Generation.

Companies such as Microsoft, Accenture and Price Waterhouse have already discovered that podcasting can be an effective recruiting tool for reaching high quality passive candidates.

Here's a link to some of Microsoft's jobcasts.

Podcasts are simple audio files that can be listened to online or downloaded to a computer or iPod. Users can also "subscribe" to them via RSS feeds using feed readers like MyYahoo. This means they can hear them without visiting the website of origin.

PODCASTING TRENDS

The adoption of podcasts is growing exponentially. Here are some facts and figures that we've gathered on this new medium.

- Forrester Research has suggested that by the end of the decade, 12 million people will be listening to podcasts as part of their media diet. And this figure was announced before Apple introduced podcasts to iTunes.
- Podcast listenership is doubling every 3-4 months.
- ITG Group says almost 60 million people will listen to podcasts by 2010.
- Apple shipped more than 21 million iPods during the last quarter of 2006. Over 88 million shipped in the first 5 years of the product.
- 3 out 4 college students own an iPod.

Suffice to say, Podcasting is becoming mainstream.

TALENT SHORTAGE LOOMING

All the experts agree that there is a shortage of talent available and that it's only going to get worse. The baby boomers are aging and there aren't enough young people to fill the ranks. Therefore companies need to become more creative with their recruiting methods.

They also need to think of recruiting as marketing and develop plans to raise awareness of their company in the job market. Thinking strategically will be key since job seekers will have a myriad of companies to choose from. Those employers that stand out will have an edge in the war for talent.

Most recruiters and Human Resource professionals have traditionally relied on the newspapers or job boards to advertise their openings. But these tools offer only snapshots of a job.

What if you could let prospective candidates hear your employees actually speak about the job?

What if you could bring your jobs to life?

Well, now you can with JobsinPods.com.

JobsinPods.com is not your typical job board. It's a strategic marketing tool for employers looking to recruit the next generation of job seekers.

"Candidates are dying for real information and real ways to connect to potential employers..."

-Shannon Seery, Exceller8ion.com

We conduct over the phone interviews with your HR staff or other employees and publish them as a podcast.

During each interview we ask probing questions on your work environment, company culture, benefits and more. You'll tell us what kind of jobs you're currently hiring for and how to apply. Then we publish the interview on JobsinPods.com and broadcast it to the places where iPod people go...iTunes, Podcast Alley & other podcast sites.

We'll also set up a feed for you so you can display the podcasts directly from your own web site.

Remember, Recruiting is Marketing. Podcasting your jobs is a marketing tool that every employer can and should be doing.

We do all the heavy lifting. There's no software to learn, no web site to remember, no technical knowledge needed. From you, we require only 15-20 minutes of your time per podcast. Passive job seekers will then discover your jobcast on our site on search engines or among dozens of other podcast directories on the web.

WHAT THE EXPERTS ARE SAYING

Here's what some influential leaders in the recruiting landcape say about jobcasting.

» Peter Weddle:

The use of RSS (Really Simple Syndication) and podcasting to access content will grow dramatically among all cohorts of the workforce. As a result, job boards, employers and staffing firms will extend the reach of their online advertising by transmitting specified job postings to individual candidates via their personal digital assistant (e.g., MP3 player, iPod). This enhanced portability will take recruitment advertising beyond just-in-time to all-of-the-time. It will make the right recruitment messages available to talent wherever and whenever they want to see them.

» AIRS:

You may have noticed more recruiting websites featuring podcasts. Podcasts are online audio presentations that can be downloaded from the Internet onto an iPod, MP3 player—or even a computer, provided you have the software, which can be downloaded for free.

What makes podcasting an attractive recruiting tool? The format offers a way to get candidates to listen to what organizations have to say. A picture may be worth a thousand words, but nothing speaks like a human voice.

Portability and flexibility are also factors. Because podcasts can be downloaded to portable, lightweight devices, the technology provides an opportunity to reach an audience at their convenience—which means they'll be more inclined to really listen.

Podcasts are particularly appealing to younger candidates. Perhaps it's not surprising then that recruiting sites aimed at this audience have been among the first to add podcasts.

» David Kippen, TMP:

...ever thought about jobcasting? Okay, so maybe I'm in love with the name, but think about it for a moment. We all know (or most of us do, at least), that employment branding 2.0 is on the way...What if you could put a podcast–call it a jobcast...

You'd talk about the job, talk about the kind of person you're looking for—and most importantly, (with coaching and maybe scripting from HR) you'd talk about yourself, your team, your work environment, maybe your location, maybe even the view from the cubicle your prospect would sit in. Oh, and at the end, you'd put your recruiter's phone number.

What would happen? You'd attract the highest quality candidates. They'd listen out of curiosity, they'd compare the sound of your voice with their managers, and they'd think seriously about the picture you painted. And I guarantee you that each call your recruiter received would be from a seriously well-qualified prospect.

» Improved Experience Blog:

If you are trying to reach an Internet-savvy audience, podcasting is an interesting tool. Employees at all levels of your company could spend a few minutes talking about why it is a great place to work, what they are learning to grow professionally, and the company's vision for the future. In addition to differentiating your company, podcasting creates opportunities to connect with prospective hires.

And if you're worried that no one will listen to the broadcast, don't be. Digital Bulletin reports that as many as a quarter of all adult internet users will listen to a podcast in the next six months.

» Steve Rothberg, Collegrecruiter.com:

These members of Gen Y are comfortable with podcasts, RSS feeds, and just about all other forms of technology. Keep in mind that just as you don't need to be a chemical engineer in order to recruit one, you also don't need to be a technology savvy member of Gen Y to recruit one.

HOW IT WORKS

After scheduling your first interview this is what happens.

1. We call you and conduct the interview. It takes about 15-20 minutes.

2. The interview is recorded and saved as a audio file (MP3).

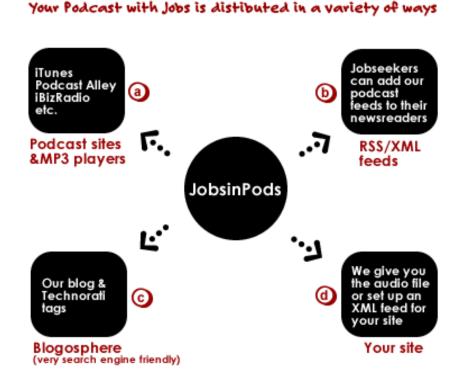

3. It is then posted to our site (which is a blog) and immediately available for download or listening.

4. We send you a copy to use on your own web site.

5. Within 24-48 hours your "podcast with jobs" is fed to our distribution channel of over two dozen podcast sites and directories such as iTunes and Podcast Alley.

6. At the end of each podcast we direct job seekers to your career page (or job board) to apply for the jobs they heard about. Instructions for applying will also be posted to our blog when we post your interview. Each blog entry will be categorized and tagged for search engine optimization.

Distributing Your Jobcast

Each podcast on JobsinPods.com is distributed in a variety of ways to maximize its exposure.

a) Podcast Sites & MP3 Players: a number of podcast directories exist which let users promote their audio. We have setup distribution channels with over two dozen of them. This is how many passive candidates will find them. In addition, MP3 players like Apple's iPOD are proliferating. Users of these portable devices will be able to download them directly.

b) RSS /XML Feeds: RSS (Really Simple Syndication) and XML feeds allow internet users to take our "feed" of podcasts and add them to their "feed reader" or add them to their own web sites for listening. This puts the power of listening in their control. They won't have to come to JobsinPods.com, rather they can listen to your podcast right from their feed reader.

c) Blog & Technorati tags: Jobs in Pods is not just a web site. It's a blog and it comes with built in advantages for attracting search engine traffic. Each of your podcasts will be posted to this blog then categorized and tagged. The search engines will pick up on these tags and drive traffic to it. For example, a post entitled "Sales Jobs with XYZ Company in White Plains, NY", will attract people typing in the words "sales jobs ny" in a search engine.

Using the blog search engine Technorati we'll also "tag" each podcast with the keywords from our interview. If you are looking for marketing people, we'll add tags that say "marketing jobs" and "marketing manager", for example.

d) Your Site: Working with your webmaster, we can setup a feed of just your podcasts that you can simultaneously broadcast on the career section of your corporate web site. Wouldn't it be great if potential canidates could hear you speak about the jobs on your site?
