

Doug Levinson

Doug has a dual undergraduate degree in English Literature and Biological Psychology (having studied at Stanford, Berkeley, and Oxford), a J.D. (from USC) and an MBA (from UCLA). Doug worked as a successful lawyer, investment banker, corporate strategist, consultant, entrepreneur, photographer and university instructor. Doug has served as a Law Clerk to the California Court of Appeal and as a Special Master to the United States District Court.

As a consultant, Doug helped engineer the sale of a internet infrastructure company to a publicly-traded competitor for more than $500M. As an academic, Doug has taught for nearly fifteen years at 5 different top-twenty graduate schools (in two different disciplines).

Doug's students — among the premier graduate students in the country — consistently identify him as one the best instructors of their college careers. Currently — in addition to his teaching and significant non-profit activities — Doug serves as CEO of a small biotech firm that is owned and operated by senior immunology faculty from UCLA. Doug is also the author of 75-25: Three Quarters of an MBA, One Quarter of the Grief! Away from work, Doug enjoys playing piano and saxophone, studying martial arts, playing with computers, reading, cycling, skiing and writing. Doug and his wife, Ann, have been together for 24 years and claim to have the two coolest kids in the galaxy. They all like hanging out and watching The Simpsons.
