The GPO stands proudly in the centre of Cambridge and has a very colourful history dating back to 1906 when King Edward VII was on the throne. It was purpose built as Cambridge's new Cambridge Post Office complete with town clock tower. In 1936 when Edward VIII abdicated to marry Mrs Wallis Simpson, it was extended with the grill put over the archway. A clock originally took pride of place on the 53ft high tower but unfortunately during the 1931 earthquake it cracked and was re housed three years later in a newly built tower which can be seen in the Jubilee Gardens. The Cambridge Post Office changed its name to NZ Post in 1987. In November 2004, NZ Post moved its premises to Duke Street and the historic building was put up for lease. 12 months later after much research and effort The GPO vision was turned into a reality as the building was lovingly and thoughtfully restored into a sophisticated bar and brassiere now known as the (GPO) Short for the General post Office. The Bar and Restaurant was opened to the public in October 2005 and has been a great success due to the growing population of Cambridge and the more sophisticated and international presence that is now being incorporated into the town.

The restaurant has also been awarded an Award of Excellence by the prestigious New York wine magazine, Wine Spectator, for the last six years running, and joins only seven other restaurants in New Zealand to be recognized by this award. O'Connell Street Bistro is currently the only restaurant in Auckland city with this award. Most recently, the restaurant was awarded Best Wine List in the 2006 Metro Corbans Restaurant of the Year awards.

Auckland sprawls across the cones, hills, ridges and valleys of an old volcanic field. Bestriding an isthmus, the cities and boroughs of greater Auckland stretch literally from coast to coast and this gives an interesting and natural diversity. Being surrounded by safe and interesting waters, Aucklanders have become a water-oriented people. It is estimated there are more boats here per capita than anywhere else in the world; hence Auckland has been dubbed “The City of Sails”. The climate is temperate and well balanced throughout the seasons. This factor, coupled with Auckland’s sea-level location, its green pleasantness and relaxed way of life, add up to a favourable environment.*
