Members of the JumpIn mobile social network can now enjoy all the features of the community from their desktop browsers

Orlando, Florida (PRWEB) February 13, 2008 -- The JumpIn mobile social network (http://jumpinmobile.com) now extends to the desktop with a simple, elegant interface that mobile phone users will find immediately familiar. With today's announcement, JumpIn developer Red Planet Media, Inc., (http://redplanetmedia.com) is enabling a cross-pollination of both desktop and mobile users by providing both groups a similar look and feel. Current members will find the new desktop replicates the experience on the mobile phone and at the same time provides powerful enhancements. For new members, the desktop is fun, easy, and provides the perfect training ground for the mobile experience.

"We love the power of social networking on mobile phones and we wanted the desktop experience to complement the mobile experience," stated Dean Fresonke, President of Red Planet Media. "We believe we've struck the perfect balance with our new JumpIn desktop and expect it to help accelerate our growth in markets with significant desktop penetration such as the U.S."

Jumpln's new desktop experience replicates the look and feel of a mobile phone but at the same time enables new desktop-only features such as uploading pictures and media files directly from the desktop using the industry-standard "browse" and "upload" paradigm. Members can also now use a full keyboard and mouse to navigate the site.
