

To most people, a career is a way to move up.
To a social worker, it's also a way to reach out.

March is National Professional Social Work Month.

People become social workers because they seek a purpose for their careers. They're passionate, committed individuals who want to not only give of themselves, but also provide a service for others and the communities in which they live. In 2009, National Professional Social Work Month honors these individuals who believe that helping others truly makes a difference in this world...and a difference in the lives of people in need.
