

DON'T LET POISON IVY RUIN THOSE PRICELESS MOMENTS

Don't Even Chance It

Free time with the one's we love is what we live for. Why chance ruining great memories over terrible, painful blemishes and blisters. Going outside without proper poison ivy preparation is like jumping into a ring of fire.

Better To Be Safe Than Sorry

When you come in contact with poisonous plants such as Poison Ivy, Oak, or Sumac, you must act right away, in particular if you might be allergic. This is because the instant the plant's oil is on your skin, you can't escape the ensuing rashes, blistering, and that gruesome itching! All you can hope to do is contain it that instant, and hope it doesn't spread to other parts of your body or sensitive areas, like your face and genitals. The worst is when you don't realize you've come in contact with the plant and you unknowingly spread the oils to your environment or others you come in contact with, infecting yourself and them!

Poison Ivy Rash Symptoms

Humans usually develop an allergic reaction after repeated exposure. Everyone has a different sensitivity, and therefore a slightly different reaction, to poison ivy. Common symptoms include: itching, redness, inflammation, burning, blisters

About Poison Ivy

The three main types of poisonous plants, Poison Ivy, Oak and Sumac on their own do not hurt you. It is your body's reaction to the Urushiol oil found in the plant that causes the aggravating itch and painful blisters. Urushiol (ooh-roo-she-all) oil is found in the stem, roots, and leaves of Poison Ivy, Oak and Sumac plants. When you come into contact with this oil, it easily penetrates your skin, causing an allergic reaction to occur. The stronger your immune system is, the worse this reaction will be.
