

Items That Will Help Speed Your Free SSDI Evaluation

The more information you have handy, the faster we can determine if you might be eligible for SSDI.

- Your employment history. This includes organizations you worked for over the past 10 years is ideal, the time period that you worked for them and your earnings.
- Your Social Security statement. The Social Security Administration mails an earnings statement to working Americans each year. It includes basic information about your earnings and tells you the amount you (and your family) will receive each month if you become disabled, retire, etc. A sample statement is available here. Don't have your last Social Security earnings statement? We can obtain the information for you, or you can Request it online.
- Your medical diagnosis
- Type(s) of doctor(s) whom you see, including specialists' names and phone numbers, and dates of last visit(s)
- Hospital or medical center where you have received treatment
- How long your condition has kept you from working and dates of any attempts to return to work
- General list of restrictions/limitations your doctor discussed with you
- List of prescriptions/medications to treat your condition
- Any Workers' Compensation, state disability, SSA retirement, unemployment benefits or long-term disability information (if applicable) you are receiving
- Date and information about your most recent denial (if you have already applied and been turned down for SSDI)
- Veteran status
- Monies owed: back taxes, child support, student loans in default or bankruptcy that have not been discharged