New Online Safety Training Saves Cleaning Companies Injuries, Time, and Money

Rogers, MN – January 27, 2010 - Safety training for janitorial employees is a vital step in the hiring process, as well as a requirement for continued cleaning company employment. The Janitorial Store has partnered with EMPO Corporation to provide online access to the most up-to-date, OSHA Compliant safety training available today.

Employees log in to access the safety training and upon completion, answer a 20-question quiz. Once they pass the quiz they receive a Certificate of Completion that the employer retains in their employee file.

OSHA (Occupational Safety and Health Administration) requires employers to train their employees in the safety and health aspects of their jobs. OSHA believes that training is crucial for protecting workers from injuries and illnesses. Training is also essential for keeping Worker's Compensation claims to a minimum, which keeps overhead costs down. Effective training programs should result in fewer injuries and illnesses, lower insurance premiums, more productive employees and better employee morale.

Jean Hanson, co-founder of The Janitorial Store states, "Too many cleaning business owners don't think about safety training until an accident happens. They need to be proactive and provide ongoing training for all their employees." She continues, "With online safety training, employers can offer training and testing that is OSHA Compliant. Plus they'll receive a Certificate of Completion to document the training for their records."

Safety training is required for the success of any cleaning business. The online safety training available through The Janitorial Store is a cost-effective method to provide the necessary training and corresponding documentation required for every employee.
