

ABOUT THE AUTHOR —

Success was a way of life when Robert Mulford grew up as a boy in the small town of Amherst, Ohio. His father was a very well respected and successful doctor and Robert was taught success was earned through hard work, dedication and a commitment to serve others with integrity and excellence.

Robert Mulford earned a Bachelor of Arts in Art Education from Bowling Green State University in Ohio. His degree took him to Michigan as a high school art teacher and then to the General Motors Corporation as an artist in their styling division.

Growing up in the home of an independent businessman, Robert always had that free spirit and desire to be self-employed. Through a lot of hard work and self-education, Robert started his own business as a motivational speaker and sales trainer. After many successful years in the motivational business, he decided to change professions. Robert became an independent contractor working on and building single family homes. After a short illness, his son took over the business and Robert retired.

Wanting to stay active, he enrolled in Piedmont College in Georgia to pursue a Masters Degree in Education. He then realized that going back into teaching would be too confining for his independent spirit. For Robert, retirement was better than confinement. It was at this time that he took a writing class from a friend and became motivated to write this book for teenagers.
