ChildSharing.com offers parents a foundational understanding of parenting skills in order to raise children from toddlers to teens. It is rich with effective strategies for instilling communication, cooperation, responsibility, and self-esteem in your children and teens. Childsharing provides tools and a positive approach to discipline in an effort to develop a strong sense of responsibility in your children as well as create an encouraging family environment. This class is appropriate for, all parents expecting or having children of any age, from toddlers to teens; step-Parents, grandparents, aunts and uncles, babysitters, teachers, counselors, nurses, social workers, or anyone who relates to children.

Encourage and engage your child in conversation on various topics (in person and face-to-face, no notes). Don't be afraid to ask a question that you yourself do not have the answer for. Ask your child questions that you already know the answers to - to verify their truthfulness.

Be a role model - be aware of your own behaviors and attitudes in front of your children. Acknowledge them when they behave in a manner you approve of.

Set limits and consequences for their behavior and misbehavior. Be as consistent as possible.

Spend time together - start when they're young - as they grow older they will accept your participation.

Discuss any problem. Do not be afraid to compromise. Remember that parents always make the final decisions.

Exchange ideas and what works/doesn't work with other parents. You don't have to reinvent the wheel on a daily basis.

Educate yourself so that you can be the best parent possible.
