Hunter TrueID™ - For Seniors

Diminished cognitive function can erase a person's memory of once-familiar surroundings, as well as make it extremely difficult to adapt to new surroundings. As a result, individuals suffering from diseases such as Alzheimer's or dementia may wander away from their homes or care centers and turn up lost, frightened and disoriented – sometimes far from where they started. In fact, according to statistics, more than 60 percent of these individuals unintentionally wander away from home at some point. Recognizing the importance of protecting those afflicted with these conditions, Hunter Systems Group, Inc. has developed a facial recognition software product, Hunter TrueID™ which enables caregivers and police to identify missing or wandering individuals and help them return home safely.

How it works:

An interested party can enroll a loved one at www.huntertrueid.com. A photo and limited information about your loved one is automatically passed to the Hunter TrueID™ database via secure internet connection. Once a wandering individual has been located by a police department and their identity is unknown, their photo can then be compared against the Hunter TrueID™ database using cutting-edge facial recognition technology. If the system receives a match in Hunter TrueID™, that person's information will be displayed so he or she may safely be returned.

As it stands now, most police departments have a paper form that is available for individuals to fill out with an attached photo. This document is typically filed in a filing cabinet at the police department and not readily available to other police departments in surrounding towns. Hunter TrueID™ eliminates that issue by quickly and efficiently disseminating critical information to police officers, regardless of their jurisdiction, when they need it most.
