

MetaMoJi took full control of 7notes and starts delivering high value, low cost handwriting recognition for the Kindle Fire to a wider audience

Tokyo, Japan, February 23rd, 2012

MetaMoJi are pleased to announce that they making 7notes, their popular digital notes application for iPad, iPhone, Android and Amazon Kindle Fire, more easily available to a wider audience. MetaMoJi have taken full control of the 7notes development and marketing strategy and are working to deliver a high quality handwriting experience to more tablet and smart-phone users across the world.

The cost of 7notes for Kindle Fire will be reduced from $9.99 to $0.99 starting from February 23rd.

“7notes has changed the way that people interact with their smart phones and tablet devices, socially and for business.” said Kaz Ukigawa, the CEO of MetaMoJi. “We hope that reducing the cost of 7notes for the Kindle Fire will help nurture creativity and innovation from a much wider audience. We have seen that handwriting onto Apple and Android devices can be used to enable a better customer experience, to streamline paper oriented processes, and to reduce risks within document management.”

The 7notes proprietary state-of-the-art handwriting recognition engine allows users to take notes on the go, using their fingers or a pen, and easily switch between handwriting and keyboard entry with a single touch. A state of the art prediction engine helps to deliver an extremely high recognition capability “out of the box”, with no learning process needed. Notes can be saved as different formats and stored or shared through Dropbox and Evernote.
