

How Did The Chanda Plan Foundation Begin?

“I love the hope and health that integrative therapies can bring to someone with a disability,” Hinton said. “I believe so strongly in them because they saved my life.”

Ms. Hinton's (founder) interest in integrative therapies started in 2003. Her spinal cord injury had compromised her health to the degree that her weight dropped to 59 lbs, she had chronic pain and her immune system had depleted to a dangerous level, resulting in 911 emergency calls, numerous doctor visits and a lengthy hospital stay. After encouragement to participate in integrative therapies, such as, acupuncture, massage therapy, physical therapy and holistic nutrition, Ms. Hinton was able to gain back the 20 lbs she had originally lost and become almost pain free.

In addition, her endurance, strength and movement increased dramatically. Medicaid, which is a primary insurance for people with long-term disabilities, does not fund integrative therapies. Medical coverage is limited to traditional medicines, giving persons with disabilities access to ongoing treatments that misuse the health care system. Due to her once unimaginable improvements and stories from other individuals within her community experiencing the same complications, Ms. Hinton was motivated to make these therapies accessible to others and founded The Chanda Plan Foundation in 2006.

Keynote Speaker:
ARON RALSTON

“Saying farewell is also a bold and powerful beginning.”

In May 2003 Aron Ralston, became trapped alone in a Utah canyon for days after slipping on a loose rock. When Aron wasn't able to free his right arm he was forced to cut it off with a dull knife. Once freed Aron marched to safety, in which he rappelled one-armed down a hill and then hiked six miles before someone found him. Aron recaptured this unbelievable experience in his 2004 book Between a Rock and Hard Place. In 2010 Aron experienced world notoriety after his story was made into an Oscar nominated film 127 Hours.

“Everything happens for a reason, and part of that beauty of life is that we're not allowed to know those reasons for certain.”
