

Judith was born and raised on the breathtaking Island of Bermuda located in the Atlantic Ocean. She discovered her talent for writing as a child and has since become a published author.

Some of Judith's poetry was included in the "Portraits of Life" and "A Season of Flowers", which were both published by The National Library of Poetry.

As a teenager, Judith did not take her literary skills seriously until she discovered herself writing musical lyrics and poems for her friends. When her friends requested more of her writings, she began to understand her gift of writing. From those moments Judith was joyfully inclined to meet their needs.

Judith's inspiration to write, I Can Fly, came to her during her daily walks about her hilly property as she quietly watched birds of various species play and sing together. She watched their behavior and how they interacted with each other. In a way, they acted like humans.

The story focuses on consequential behavior or the management of behavior and its consequences. Judith raised her two sons to live by the laws of the land and by the rules of her home. She also taught Galatians 6:7, which reads, "Be not deceived (or not be led off course by other's influences); God is not mocked: for whatever a man soweth, that shall he also reap."

I Can Fly! is a story about a young bluebird who learns that being disobedient can likely lead to trouble, physical pain and heartache. Bluey is an adorable, yet mischievous tree-bird who finds himself locked away in a cage where he eventually has time to think about the problems he has caused himself, his friends, and his mother.

Bluey learns from the consequences of his behavior. First, he understands that rules are made to protect him, and second, that by doing what is right he can remain happy and free.
