Montreal, Canada, April 30, 2012 - Messaging Architects, global builders of Business Driven Email™, today announced the availability of the market's first integrated email management platform Netmail™ 5.1.

Netmail™ provides complete email archiving and security, sub-second search capabilities, data leak prevention, and email policy enforcement for enterprise messaging and collaboration systems. The release of Netmail™ 5.1 introduces a new unified web interface, email encryption and secure delivery, and support for Microsoft Office 365.

"We chose Netmail™ to migrate to Office 365 after a recommendation from Microsoft," says Sam Dee, IT Manager at City of Siloam Springs. "We knew the product was still in beta, but we were impressed with the honesty of the Messaging Architects' team and the confidence they had in their product. We'd participated in betas before, but our experience with Netmail™ was unlike any other beta. The product is rock solid."

Messaging Architects acquired Netmail™ from Novell in 2007 and leveraged the high-performance code base and talented development team to deliver the new Netmail. "Evolving market dynamics made it clear that we needed to focus all our resources towards delivering our new integrated email management platform," says Frederic Bourget, Chief Operating Officer at Messaging Architects. "The new Netmail™ simplifies email management by eliminating the need to deploy, integrate and manage multiple third-party systems."

Demonstrating Messaging Architects' continued commitment to engineering excellence and client satisfaction, improvements in Netmail™ 5.1 were made to existing exporting capabilities to allow organizations to respond quickly and more efficiently to access to information requests and to the indexing engine which provides increased scalability for an organization's growing volume of electronic information.
