

Give Your Students Realistic Pathways to Employability

New CTE Courses in Development

Over the last few decades, the American dream has become increasingly unattainable for many citizens. As the focus of the economy shifts away from manufacturing toward service, information, and knowledge, students graduate from high school unprepared for careers and college.

To add to this dismal picture, the education system in America has continued to focus primarily on college readiness, when in truth, only 69 percent of students graduate from high school in four years, and colleges graduate about half of their students in six years.

ODYSSEYWARE is pleased to be a part of the solution by introducing a new slate of courses ideal for placement into schools' Career Technology Education (CTE) career clusters. Planned for release in mid-2012, these courses are being developed to help students prepare for careers and college by acquiring the workplace competencies necessary for success after high school.

“ODYSSEYWARE is a complete online curriculum solution for schools, and it's geared to meet the needs of all students.”

CTE Courses Now in Development:

- Business Law
- Career Management
- Principles of Business Finance
- Introduction to Entrepreneurship
- Microsoft Access and Excel
- Microsoft Word, PowerPoint, and Publisher

These new courses that emphasize career and college preparation will be added to current ODYSSEYWARE courses already suited for use in specific CTE pathways. In fact, all courses included in the ODYSSEYWARE learning management system promote critical thinking and problem solving, while encouraging students to take responsibility for their own learning.

Join us as we prepare to open a new door to career and college readiness for your students. More details will be available soon.
