

Paramedical Tattooing Experts Are Featured During Breast Cancer Awareness Month

The Whitney Center for Permanent Cosmetics is highlighting their three dimensional cosmetic tattooing artists this month for breast cancer awareness. Their unique paramedical tattooing procedure combined with artistic talent allows breast cancer survivors to regain natural looking breast beauty again with their help.

New York City, NY (PRWEB) September 27, 2012 The Whitney Center for Permanent Cosmetics is promoting an unusual 3-D technique of areola and nipple cosmetic tattooing implanted by their two Board Certified technicians, Melany Whitney and Mandy Sauler, this October to raise awareness for breast cancer.

These experienced permanent cosmetic technicians have developed a very unique skill that helps breast cancer survivors regain their dignity and femininity after cancer surgery. Their special artistically implanted cosmetic tattooing is natural looking; where there was no breast nipple after surgery, one is created with a special "illusion of protrusion" tattoo.

Testimonials from patients and clients reflect gratitude for this "life changing" procedure that The Whitney Center for Permanent Cosmetics provides. Clients call the procedure -- detailed, natural, realistic, and 3-D in appearance. Many have stated how life-changing the procedure has been for them; giving back their confidence and personal sense of beauty.

The acclaimed owner and founder of the firm, Melany Whitney, is a graduate of Cornell University's School of Art and Architecture. She has been helping women by re-designing their nipples and areolas (the circular area around the nipples) using her unique artistic talent and skill using micropigmentation (cosmetic tattooing).

"Melany's work is a tour-de-force of artistry," says Mia Talmor MD at Weill Cornell, a leading breast cancer treatment center in New York City. "It's so real-looking -- and even gives the illusion of nipple protrusion--that some patients almost forget that they've had the work done."

Unfortunately after breast cancer surgery, many women are unable to keep their nipples and areola area. This loss can be devastating, since this area defines the appearance of the breast and gives a woman her sense of femininity. The Whitney Center's special procedure has become so frequently recommended by physicians that insurance companies now will routinely pay for this type of specialized after-care treatment.

In addition to this unique and in-demand service for breast cancer patients, the Whitney Center also treats and camouflages scars from breast surgeries such as breast lifts, breast augmentation, and mastopexy.
