

DAWN OF A NEW DAY by James Lumbers

Time has a way of changing everything as we know it. The old man staring at the metropolis in front of him lived his life in simple contrast to what the world has become today. The mists seep around the old model T as if protecting its rusty ruin from prying eyes. We all have our roots in the past which is often blurred by circumstance. But we should never forget that we each have our heritage which guides us in the way we live today.
