

Medical Billing and Coding Services Industry Experiencing Significant Growth

Statistics project boom in medical billing industry, says Tuttle

The medical billing and coding services industry is exploding in the United States. The Bureau of Labor Statistics projects that jobs in the medical billing and health information industry will grow by a whopping 21 percent by 2020 – a number faster than the average for all other occupations.

A new website has been created entirely to explore everything devoted to medical billing and coding services.

“Our new site has it all,” said site spokesperson Zach Tuttle. “Whether you’re already a medical billing professional or you’re just looking to break into the health information field, we’ve got you covered.”

For professionals, the latest medical billing software and running an individual online or medical billing service from home is discussed. For beginners, the best schools and where to obtain the proper certification is covered.

“By visiting our site,” Tuttle says, “professionals can get a leg up on the competition, and upstarts can get a leg up on the rest of the field. Beginners can also learn all about what qualifications they will need, what the work environment will be and how much they can expect to make in this rapidly-growing field.”

Medical billing and coding services can at times be too complex to understand, but the information provided by the new site simplifies things so that even someone with zero experience can grasp it.

“Things can sometimes be very difficult to comprehend in the medical billing and coding services industry,” said Tuttle. “However, knowledge is power and we’ve designed our site so that everything is easy to understand.”
