

www.bhivetravel.com

7815 Floyd St.

Overland Park, KS 66204

How Small to Mid-sized Businesses Can Earn More Airline Business Rewards

If your company isn't already taking advantage of airline rewards programs for small to mid-size businesses, you are missing out on free airline tickets and other business travel perks. If you are already signed-up, B-hive Travel makes it easy to apply and keep track of all of the reward points your company is earning towards free flights.

Similar to how your company earns rewards points on company credit cards, your business can also earn rewards points with airlines for each dollar any employee spends with that airline. And, your individual employees still earn their own frequent flyer miles for the same flights.

It's free to sign-up with the airlines, and points can add up quickly. Fly just two trips per month, and your company could earn a free roundtrip ticket in just one year. Or, use your points for First and Business Class upgrades to reward a top-performer or treat a special client.

The biggest trick is making sure you are getting credit for all of the trips your employees are already taking. Unless you have a travel agent booking all of your employees' reservations for you, and he or she is adding your rewards number to each reservation, it can be nearly impossible to make sure you are getting credit for all of your employees' flights.

Your B-hive Travel website makes it easy (and free) to apply and track your airline business rewards points. You can enter your airline business rewards numbers into your company's dedicated business travel website, and all reservations made through your website will automatically apply your reward account numbers. From your homepage dashboard you will see in real time how much your employees are spending on each airline so you know how many rewards points your company has earned.

So, which airline business rewards program you should sign-up for? Sign up with the airline most of your employees are flying today. If you're not sure which airline your employees are using the most, start by signing-up with the airline that has a strong presence in the cities where your employees are located. You can sign up for multiple airline programs, but the more you get your travelers to book at your 'preferred' airline the faster you will earn free travel.

Learn more and sign up for airline business rewards programs here:

AirTran Airways a2B Program

American Airlines Business ExtrAA Program

Delta Airlines SkyBonus Program

Frontier Airlines Best Care Business Program

JetBlue's TrueBlue Program

United Airlines PerksPlus Program

Once you have received your airline business rewards account number from the airline, you will need to add that number to your B-hive Travel website. Your company's travel manager will have access to the administration section of your company's travel website and can add your airline business rewards account numbers. Then, make sure all employees are booking flights through your company's travel website so you get credit for your all of your points.

Earn rewards faster by guiding travelers to book on your 'preferred airline'. Your company's travel manager can even set-up your B-hive Travel website to display your 'preferred airline' above other airlines to help guide your employees to book the flights you will earn the most points with when the price is comparable to the other airlines in the market.

Your B-hive Travel website will keep track of how much you are spending on each airline so you know how many reward points you have earned. Once your company has started booking through your company's travel website, your travel manager will see every dollar your company is spending on each airline right from the homepage. It's as simple as that to keep track of how many points you are earning and when you can redeem your free travel or upgrades with the airline.

Get Started With Earning & Tracking Your Airline Rewards Programs Points