

Drugs, Crime and Violence: From Trafficking to Treatment

(Hamilton Books)

By Howard Rahtz

Reviews

“In the realm of drug policy ideas, it matters who’s talking. With his background both in addictions and in law enforcement, Howard knows what he is talking about. When he talks, I listen. When he writes, I read.”

- David Logan, M.A. LICDC, Executive Director, Prospect House

“With a rare combination of treatment and law enforcement backgrounds, Howard brings a unique perspective to the drug war. Howard’s book is one of the few I have read which factually and objectively covers all aspects of the “war of drugs.” Whether [you’re] new to this issue of [you’re] a drug policy scholar, when you’ve closed the [back] cover, you will be enlightened, well-informed, and capable of developing an educated reasonable conclusion. The book is transformational. Well done.”

- Major Neill Franklin, Executive Director, LEAP (Law Enforcement Against Prohibition)

“Howard Rahtz has presented one of the most comprehensive works ever written dealing with the multiple layers of problems caused by drugs and alcohol in our society. His intuitive analysis of our drug policies, along with his insights into our interdiction and law enforcement efforts, has rightfully concluded that unless we begin to make major changes in our attitudes, laws, and social policies, we may never come close to resolving this ubiquitous and devastating dilemma.”

- Lawrence M. Anthony, Ph.D., LICDC, Substance Abuse Treatment Specialist, U.S. District Court, Coordinator, Addictions Studies, Beckfield College
