

Message to Entrepreneurs

Evidence suggests that entrepreneurship is a viable alternative to wage and salary employment (or unemployment) for many low and moderate-income people. Entrepreneurship and self-employment are an essential component of upward mobility. In addition, there are many other benefits: entrepreneurs and self-employed people tend to report they have more control over their lives and more report being more satisfied with their lives than wage and salary workers are.

Many low to moderate-income entrepreneurs struggle because they do not have access to capital. Entrepreneurs are no longer limited to a few financial institutions that control all of the money; our goal is to help entrepreneurs who have good ideas for building companies gain access to capital, so they can become significant engines of job growth.
