

Introduction

Over the course of the last two years, I interviewed over 350 women and 500 men from different backgrounds-between the ages of 18 and 80, about their views on self-love, sex, love, and money. My business educational background, which is comprised of a Higher Diploma in Negotiations, a Masters' degree in Business Administration, and a Bachelors' degree in Commerce, simplified the compilation, and analysis of the researched data. Also, my experience and career as a Therapist, Spiritual healer and Empowerment Life Coach, plus my qualifications as a Neuro-linguistic Practitioner, Advanced Emotional Freedom Technique, (EFT) and Ho'oponopono Practitioner, significantly contributed to the spiritual and philosophical discussions, plus the mind-healing exercises in this book.

Furthermore, my experience working in several countries, for instance, Uganda, England, Kosovo-with the United Nations Administrative Mission, and currently in the United States, has enriched me with both the knowledge, and hands-on experience in diversity, culture and different social frameworks-which information all contributed to the analogues, insights, and discussions presented in this book.

I will begin by asking the following questions: Why are there so many single women today, and how have they contributed to that condition? Why have women failed to attract men, love, and money together as a hale and hearty bundle? More specifically, what are the "personal" factors that hinder women from attracting loving-men with money? What do women do, or don't do, that blocks this attraction? How have society, culture, and the environment in general contributed to this enduring problem?

With these questions in mind, I firstly considered it more feasible to understand men's, and women's relationships with money; and the factors that influence men's spending decisions-since money seems to be a very significant and sensitive issue in the "bundle." To achieve these objectives, I carried out extensive research in which I sampled men and women from different cultural backgrounds. My discoveries were amazing and although varied, revealed a thought-provoking detail: THIS IS A MAN'S WORLD.

Ironically, it is believed that we are all lead players in this world responsible for living the life we so desire. However, clearly, God created women very DIFFERENT from men. Without a doubt, men are molded with more strategies to get whatever they want from women, and also suppress the latter's intentions to negotiate at the same level. Although this fact is biased, it shouldn't be any woman's excuse to allow men to take advantage of her.

Women should always remember that they are exceptional beings created in the perfect image of God, and blessed with the gifts of motherhood and beauty.

If your prime purpose of reading this book is to explore how you can attract a loving man with money, settle in, take a deep breath, and get prepared for an amazing read enthralled with humor, spirituality, plus the proven tools that will reprogram you into a love, men, and money magnet.
