

Additional Facts about Cheap Men

I have heard of guys who prefer beach-dates and although the idea is without its pleasures, such arrangements could turn out to be messy.

In my research, one of the respondents admitted to have taken a woman to the beach for a date. On his way out to meet her, he realized that he needed water but had only one bottle, so he got another empty one and filled it with tap water. When he got to the beach, he acted as if giving her the bottle of tap water was equivalent to giving her the key to heaven.

Also, he made it seem so romantic and thoughtful. "I thought about you all night, which is why I brought this bottle of water especially for you," he lied.

Obviously, it is clear that such a guy repels generosity, and his relationship with money is corrupted.

The Wallet Trick

I have heard of guys who always forget their wallets in their lockers at work. They go for a date, order whatever they want, wait for the bill to be presented, and then begin searching for their wallets.

Such a man will never reveal what he is searching for. He searches in silence and could even excuse himself to go to his car to continue the search. It is only when you ask that he starts looking as if he has been punched in the balls. "I think I forgot my wallet in my locker at work," he responds. When you offer to pay the bill, he will come up with all sorts of solutions-for instance, ask to see the restaurant manager. When all efforts seem fruitless, this is when he acts embarrassed and apologetic for his "negligence." As you clear the bill, he promises to pay you back the next time you meet. However when and/or if you meet again, he will avoid the topic of money as much as he can. This is also the type of guy who would lie that his car is at the technician's for new-tire change, or the car-seats need re-clothing; just so you can pick him up, in addition to giving him rides to run his errands.

What happens after having sex with him?

Okay...so the guy finally seduced you to have sex with him. You are probably fumbling, especially if you weren't ready for it.

At this critical stage, some women remember what should have been done or said before the sex. The situation worsens if the young lady begins panicking, because trust me...it shows. If she has been calling the dude once a day, she multiplies that by twenty-four, and calls him every half hour. Why is that? It is because the young lady suddenly wakes up from her horny-weak-self and faces reality. Her mind is evaded with worry and the conviction that she has been used. It is as though she was drugged or forced into the act. Apparently, she is the one to blame. If she lacks the confidence to abide by her own terms, then the world takes over. I guess you have heard of the term, "If you don't set your standards, the world will set them for you."

On the contrary, a confident woman will pretend as if nothing happened even after the first-sex encounter. She will wear her I am-in-control attitude which could set up the brother for a worrying spree. Men naturally think that once they have had sex with you, they have conquered you. Turn the tables around and act as if you have conquered your man. As a matter of fact, let some of his calls go to voice-mail and get busy with your life. This is not to say that you ignore him completely, but rather, you prove to him that even if he got into your pants, your self-worth is still intact. You are still important, beautiful and so much more than just getting laid...you are in total control of your emotions. This attitude will encourage him to work harder to meet your standards. It will also energize his hunting instincts upon realizing that he hasn't won you over completely and still has work to do.