FREDAPAYNE

The multi-talented Freda Payne is an established jazz vocalist, songwriter, and actress, who has is known for her legendary chart-topping record, "Band of Gold," has worked with the likes of Berry Gordy, Jr., Duke Ellington, Quincy Jones, and even Bill Cosby. She is best known for her singing career, yet she has also performed in musicals and acted in movies over the years, and briefly was the host of her own TV talk show.

Born on September 19 in Detroit, MI, she developed an appreciation of music at an early age with her career beginning singing radio commercial jingles, which brought the young vocalist to the attention of several music-biz heavyweights. Berry Gordy, Jr. attempted to sign her to his record company, Motown, while Duke Ellington employed her as the featured singer with his renowned orchestra for two nights in Pittsburgh, resulting in a ten-year contract. But in both cases, Payne's mother turned them down. Payne's ever-expanding theatrical repertoire includes roles in the award winning musical "Blues in the Night" and in "Jelly's Last Jam," a musical based on the life of jazz legend Jelly Role Morton. In the review for "Blues in the Night," the American Showbiz Daily states: "Freda Payne has a truly unique voice that hits an amazing number of notes with a smokey, unusual quality..." Additionally, Payne has starred in the Broadway production of Duke Ellington's "Sophisticated Ladies," "Ain't Misbehavin'" and the Tony Award winning production of "Hallelujah Baby."

Freda Payne truly is a legend of our musical and artistic history. She has been etched in the hearts and minds of those all around the world and continues to bring music, talent, and philanthropy to those around her. She is set to release her newest jazz album early this fall and plans to perform an album preview at the Legends Beyond Gala.

HOWARDMCCRARY

Traversing the worlds of gospel and secular music, multitalented Howard McCrary has built a solid reputation as an award-winning singer, songwriter, producer and musician whose resume includes some of the most prestigious and important artists in contemporary music. Howard McCrary brings a mix of artistry, enthusiasm, skill and positive energy to each and every project.

He has co-produced the album "So Good" and was nominated for a Grammy for "Best Gospel Performance, Male" for that record. During the late '80s, Howard traveled intermittently with different evangelists; in 1987, he was given ASCAP's Duke Ellington Award for most promising writer in gospel music and was commissioned to write the piece Yesterday, Today And Tomorrow for the Brooklyn Philharmonic Symphony Orchestra.

As the '80s ended and the '90s began, Howard's workload accelerated considerably: he was featured as a background vocalist on Quincy Jones' best-selling Back On The Block, as well as arranging vocal parts for the song "Keep The Faith" on Michael Jackson's 1992 multi-platinum set Dangerous. He began working with Chaka Khan in 1993 as keyboardist and musical director. Later, he worked with Oscar-winning composer Hans Zimmer on the film The Power Of One. Howard's studio activities have included production work with teen idol Jennifer Love Hewitt, soul diva Sandra St. Victor, gospel great Helen Baylor and successful R&B group Changing Faces.

Howard moved to Hong Kong in 2005 and merged into the local music scene quickly. He performed on the Soundtrack of the Chinese Movie "Confessions of Pain" & "Happy Funeral" and with the Hong Kong Chinese Orchestra, conducted by Maestro Hubert Yan. As both an entrepreneur and masterful musician, Howard McCrary has much to celebrate as he continues to find new ways to express his boundless artistry and contribute his multiplicity of God-given talents and skills.
