

Children's Video Platform Kidobi Announces a Global Distribution Partnership with Yellow House English

Language learning content from Yellow House English is now available to Kidobi subscribers around the world.

Toronto, ON, Canada, October 10, 2013—Online video platform, Kidobi, announced today a new content partnership with Yellow House English, the company behind two preschool series designed to help young children learn English. Baby Beetles (20 x 5') and Tom and Keri (26 x 7') are available now on Kidobi.com, as well as through Kidobi's mobile apps for iPad and Android devices. Both series will be available to Kidobi subscribers globally.

Both series were created by Claire Selby, a writer and composer specializing in English as an additional language for children. Baby Beetles is a unique series of animated songs designed to teach the first 160 words and phrases of English to children whether as their first, second or an additional language. Tom and Keri is a new series to help preschool children aged 3-6 learn English. The 26 episodes follow Tom and Keri on adventures with songs, laughter and lots of new characters to meet in their magic yellow playhouse.

Kidobi provides personalized content recommendations for preschool children, allowing their parents to easily influence the kind of content their child sees. "Parents are asking for content with an emphasis on language learning. Our partnership with Yellow House English demonstrates our commitment to give our viewers what they want," says Eric Sorenson, Director of Research & Content at Kidobi. "We expect language learning to be a big part of Kidobi's future."

"We're thrilled to have our content featured on Kidobi's unique video platform," says Artur Gniadek of Yellow House English. "It means that our programs can find the right audience, making the learning experience even more effective."
