

Webinar Jam: Review Examining Mike Filsaime and Andy Jenkin's Google Hangout Program Released

Webinar Jam reviews have been flooding the Internet and MarketersBlueprint.com reveals the truth about this add-on that claims it can improve the marketing power of Google Hangouts.

(PRWEB) January 10, 2014

Webinar Jam, a program claiming to be unique in the fact that as people's audience grows, they're fees won't cost them any more at all, has caught the attention of MarketersBlueprint.com's Stan Stevenson, prompting an investigative review.

"Our Webinar Jam review shows that what it allows you to do is host your own webinars using the power of Hangouts, but with some very special extras," reports Stevenson. "Using this program, you don't need to be understand techno speak to successfully utilize all the components it offers. It has many point and click features (such as the design codes), and you don't need to even have a clue what html even means to successfully integrate the product into your own brand. So this, along with some other cool sounding features, is what Webinar Jam is all about."

Webinar Jam includes extras like unlimited co-presenters, a whole bundle of different templates, full flexibility to broadcast the desktop, an Internet browser, PowerPoint, or webcam, one click sign up, the ability to funnel all the traffic directly from one's website or blog to the webinar, and much more. There is no need for attendees to have a Gmail or Google Mail account to login, which means they can login from any email address whatsoever. Users have the choice to create their webinar on the spot, or to create, and then schedule for a later time and/or date. The system will then open their webinar at the required time, and notify all their registrants automatically. Social media buttons are automatically embedded into the webinar pages, encouraging attendees to share and make the event go viral. Users also have the options of turning these off if they want to remain private.

"While, Google Hangouts is a pretty fantastic piece of kit to be using, the guys who've produced Webinar Jam seem to think it could be better. It offers full Q&A and chat features that are live during the webinar, which is a great way of allowing your participants to get involved further. It is a fantastic way to generate more sales," says Stevenson. "All the webinars you create are automatically recorded, and then your participants can rewatch them on demand, at their own convenience. You can also configure your webinar to pitch products or services throughout with pop up offers, all of which are controlled by you. This natty little piece of programming allows you to do exactly as you need to."

“For any person or company that seriously uses the online world to grow their business, then Google Hangouts is definitely something that you’ll already be making the most of. If you want to increase your webinar attendances and enhance the power of your webinars, Webinar Jam gives you all the technology you need to do so, and in the easiest method possible. Even better, you keep to your intended budget because no matter how big your audience, your fees remain the same. As add-ons go, we have to admit we particularly like how simple it is to use, yet extraordinarily powerful to boot!”

Those wishing to purchase Webinar Jam, or for more information, click here:

<http://marketersblueprint.com/go/WebinarJam/>

To access a comprehensive Webinar Jam review, visit <http://marketersblueprint.com/webinar-jam-review>