Marni Kinrys Get The Girl Code Review: Program Details

GET THE GIRL CODE REVIEW BY STERLING KROSBY

Below you will find the important facts and figures I feel every consumer should know surrounding Marni Kinrys' Get The Girl Code.

At the end of this post, I have also placed some important consumer alerts about various schemes I've found from dodgy websites promoting Get The Girl Code with what appears to be little to no knowledge of the product and that may have ulterior motives to try and trick you into visiting their sites. As lead reviewer and editor for TheOfficialWebsite.co, I've been doing this a long time and have become pretty proficient at separating legitimate reviews from fake ones.

At the end of the day, I believe it's the consumer's responsibility to do their own due diligence before investing in any program, but I definitely want to share with you what I've discovered during my own research in case it helps.

As always, if you have a question about Get The Girl Code that isn't answered in one of the posts on this Get The Girl Code review site, I field questions at the following email: sterlingkrosby (at) gmail.com and will do my best to get back to you ASAP. Sometimes it may take me a few days, but if you put "Get The Girl Code Question" in the title of your email, it will help me find it and respond quicker.

Ok, on to those facts and figures...

Consumer Alerts Regarding Get The Girl Code

With the release of Get The Girl Code online, I've seen a large increase in the number of websites offering up fake reviews, fake discounts (or claiming free downloads), and doing other shady things to bring you to their sites. Usually these sites are pretty easy to identify if you know what to look for. Here's how you can protect yourself.

1.) The Fake Scam Alert:

This is indicative of sites that usually use a title to their page that says something like, "Get The Girl Code: Scam Alert!" or "Get The Girl Code: Is Michael Fiore A Scammer?" or something of that nature. In other words, when you search for Get The Girl Code in Google or another search engine, these sites show up with those types of titles in the listings.

Sometimes these sites will also use what I call the "Fear Factor" in their headlines which is something like, "Get The Girl Code: My Awful And Horrifying Experience!" This is an attempt to draw you into their site by making you think they used the product and had a really bad experience with it.

How do I know these are fake? Because the title cries SCAM!!!!!, but then you go to the page and read the review and it's always a glowing review about how great Get The Girl Code is, how much they love it, etc. etc. They only use the word SCAM to try and draw you into their site because they know if they say something is a scam, you'll probably want to check it out, right?

Don't fall for it and trust your gut when the headline/page title and review don't match. No legitimate Get The Girl Code review will cry SCAM or claim a horrible experience and then offer up a review that says the complete opposite.

2.) The "Extra Special, Super Expensive" Bonus Package Alert:

With this nonsense, people who have no knowledge of the program offer up some sort of extra special bonus package if you purchase the product through their site. Usually they mark it as something super valuable like $297 or $497 or something like that, but in reality it's just a bunch of useless ebooks that you can find online for free if you search for them.

Usually they aren't even related to the actual product. For example, they'll be something like "Buy Get The Girl Code through the link below and I'll send you "The Big Book Of Turkey Recipes" and these 10 other useless, unrelated, and free books that I've put a fake value of $497 on."Really? What do turkey recipes have to do with attracting and getting a girl? That's right, NOTHING!

To claim your bonus, they usually want you to email your purchase receipt to them so they can verify you bought from their site. But then, guess what? Now they have your email (not to mention your order details), and can start sending you a bunch of spam or even access the product using your information! Stay away.

3.) The Fake Review:

This one is pretty common. Anytime a new product like Get The Girl Code launches or begins to get popular online and people start to buy it, the fake reviews start coming out of the woodwork. Here are some good ways to spot fake reviews.

*Poorly Written Content:

This is usually the result of people using software and "spinning tools" which auto-generate content or take previously written content and "spin it" by replacing some words with related synonyms. Luckily for us, auto-generated content is pretty easy to spot so if you find yourself reading something that has really horrible grammar or makes absolutely no sense whatsoever, then don't click on any links, hit your back button, and get out of there. If you find yourself saying, "WTF did I just read?", then it's probably fake.

*Very Generic Content:

Fake reviews usually have very generic content and rarely provide any real details beyond what might be found on the product's sales page. Obviously, it's hard to write any review without some generic statements, but if you're getting the gut feeling they are being very vague and seem to be "skirting around the bush", it's probably because they have no idea what they're talking about.

Other things to look for are an over-reliance on or excessively large buy now, download, and other types of buttons. Sure, 1 or 2 buttons may be necessary to direct you where to get the program, but when they become the focal point of the page instead of the content and review itself, then it raises a red flag with me. Do I really need a huge red arrow from every corner of the page pointing at the download button which takes up my whole computer screen? I'm not blind. I see it! Really, I do.

I also always look to see if a review provides any specifics about the program. Does it mention the number of pages in the ebook? Does it list a table of contents or discuss what's found in specific chapters? If it's a membership site, does it provide any actual screenshots from inside the program? Does it quote anything directly from the book?

Small details like this can be a big indicator of whether or not the reviewer has intimate inside knowledge of the program or if they are just making general statements based on what they may have seen on the sales page.

Some Thoughts On Testimonials:

Some of you have also asked me about my thoughts on Get The Girl Code testimonials, and personally I never try to let them influence me one way or another. It's kind of a love/hate relationship. I love hearing other people's success stories. Some of them are truly inspiring.

But at the same time, testimonials online are easy to fake, almost impossible to verify, and I personally don't like basing my decisions on the results someone else may or may not have achieved with a given program.

So I guess what I'm saying is always take testimonials with a grain of salt and realize that with any program, there's going to be people who like it and who are successful and people who don't like it or who aren't successful for one reason or another. I'm a big believer in trying something for myself if I want to determine whether it works or not.

4.) The Free Download Alert:

Just like the Fake Scam Alert, some sites will try to draw you in by claiming you can download Marni Kinrys' Get The Girl Code for free. Their page titles might be something like, "Get The Girl Code Free Download". Then, you get to the site, and they try to justify it by saying it's "risk-free" and then point you to the website where it's $49.99. Well, to me risk-free and FREE aren't the same thing!

While you can technically try Get The Girl Code risk-free because of the 60-day money back guarantee, you still need the money up front to buy it in the first place so it isn't free. Get The Girl Code is not a free program and any site claiming a free download is either not being totally honest with you or is providing illegal copies, neither of which is good.

Another version of this same thing is the fake discount. "Buy through this link for 50% off". Guess what, when you click the link, you go to the website where it's $49.99, just like it normally is. I actually first noticed this one on YouTube where people were making videos claiming they found discount links to Get The Girl Code. Something about the math just stinks...let's see…$49.99 minus 50% discount through your link = $49.99! Don't fall for this tomfoolery. The price will always be $49.99 unless Marni and Michael decide to change it.

I hope that helps and please stay safe out there!
