

Wearable Tech Drops in Price as China Wholesaler Enters the Market

Wearable tech is more affordable than it has ever been before thanks to China wearable device makers says China wholesale company Chinavasion.

Interest in smart garments and wearable tech has exploded over the last twelve months with tech companies of all countries producing smart watches, watch phones, video glasses and more according to Chinavasion PR manager Rose Li.

“It's no wonder wearable gadgets have captured the world's imaginations over the last two years,” said Li. “There are a wider range of cool gadgets that are more powerful than anything we have seen in the past.”

While wearable devices are on the very bleeding edge of cool technology most come with an equally high price tag according to Li, with gadget makers trading on both the novelty of the products and the company's branding.

Smart watches, which only reach their full potential when paired with a smart phone, cost anywhere between 150 and as much as 300, says Li.

With prices between 500 and 1000 dollars she says video glasses are another gadget with an unnecessarily over-inflated price tag.

While western electronic manufacturers attempt to justify prices with gimmicks like 3D capabilities or massive virtual screens, Li says China makers are able to provide these features with prices under 300 USD. “3D video glasses don't need to cost a thousand dollars, the technology is available and works well at three hundred.

And Li says while wearable gadgets have only started to capture the world's attention, they are essentially using technology that's tried, tested and not costly to produce. “Compact screens, small powerful batteries, and tiny silicon chips can all be put together as a pair of video glasses or a smart watch extremely well for a fairly low price.”

“This is exactly what Chinavasion has done.”

Working hard to offer customers the latest in technology, Li says Chinavasion now stocks smart watches, video glasses and watch phones on the company's website for half the price of any competitor.

Buyers can still expect high quality, cutting edge devices though as Li says the company has built a strong reputation online for its fast shipping times, high quality products and world-class customer service. “With 360,000 registered customers Chinavasion has a strong reputation as a supplier of the latest gadgets.”

Li says this is something the company only adds when it adds a new product line. “Wearable gadgets are an exciting space to be in and it will be one the company will excel at.”
