Atrion Unveils New Blog on IT Thought Leadership, Workplace Culture, and Innovation

Known for thought-leadership, the company will now provide online content regularly.

Warwick, R.I. – October 8, 2014 – Since its inception, Atrion has been anchored by its belief of creating positive, lasting impact by fusing business with technology. To further illustrate this vision, the leading IT services provider has launched a blogging platform, which will feature weekly posts from the company's subject matter experts.

The blog will share the core beliefs of Atrion's top executives, who will discuss everything from fundamental technologies needed to take business to new heights to critical steps for finding and honing company culture. Upcoming corporate events, such as the AlwaysOn Symposium 2015, will also be highlighted. The platform will feature sentiments from CEO Tim Hebert, Chief Innovation Officer Chris Poe and SVP Service Delivery Ken Brindamour, among others.

"Our blog is distinctly positioned to spark a richer conversation with our audience, encouraging individuals to think of IT differently—going beyond the 'what' of IT to the 'why,' or that which drives key decisions and business processes," Hebert said.

"Atrion has been a thought leader in the IT industry for nearly three decades. We remain committed to unprecedented standards of excellence when it comes to customer engagement, communications and service; it's simply in our DNA," added Hebert. "We look forward to elucidating on our mission on our exciting new blogging platform."

Being visionary and having a voice is core to Atrion. The blogging initiative will present Atrion with a digital canvas to express key sentiments and engage in meaningful dialogues with diverse audiences, from those located in Atrion's hometown state of Rhode Island to those who are continents away.
