

Social Thinking and Transition Planning for the Adult World and Real Life

Presented by Pamela J. Crooke, PhD, CCC-SLP, SocialThinking.com

Transitioning into adulthood and living as young adults can overwhelm individuals born with social learning challenges, even those who are “bright” with strong language skills. This workshop focuses on helping both parents and professionals (teachers, counselors, psychologists) and the students themselves prepare for and respond to this transition. The focus moves into the world of adult work, the social-emotional expectations that exist in the workplace, and what it takes to live as an independent adult.

Dr. Pamela Crooke is the Director of Research and Clinical Operations and Senior Therapist at the Social Thinking Center in San Jose, CA. She has an active caseload of children, teens and adults and is the co-author (with Michelle Garcia Winner) of four award-winning books related to Social Thinking. She has served on the clinical faculty of three universities, worked in the Arizona public schools for 15 years and published a study on the effectiveness of using social thinking vocabulary in the schools. She speaks on the topic of Social Thinking on both a national and international level.
