Innovative Study Platform That Took Over Europe Just Launched In U.S., Seeks To Revolutionize How Students Connect

FOR IMMEDIATE RELEASE

NEW YORK, NY - Students in the U.S. just got access to Spitball, a platform for students by students to study, share notes, and engage in out-of-class discussions. Spitball fueled its U.S. launch after raising $2.5 million dollars in their latest round of funding.

A hit among students in it's home country of Israel and across Europe, Spitball's innovative tech platform makes studying and accessing other students' notes and study material easy from anywhere. The Spitball platform is available online, for Android, and iOS. Spitball allows students to upload and share study materials and collaborate in an effort to elevate the learning experience.

"We've seen how students in Europe have leveraged this platform to revolutionize the way they interact with fellow classmates and other students across the continent," explained Matan Libis, COO of Spitball. "This level of cross-collaboration is really changing the way students share knowledge and information in the learning environment."

Spitball is concentrating promotional activities on select top-tier universities in the U.S. Organic adoption from other universities expands as friends sign up and invite each other to join.

"We are excited to be bringing this dynamic platform to the U.S. to really transform how students interact both in and out of class." added Libis.

About Spitball

Spitball, a web-based platform, is also available on mobile devices via apps for Android and iOS. Students upload class notes, share study materials, and engage in in-class and out-of-class discussions. Spitball enables students to connect with their classmates or with other students within similar subjects around the world.
