

Handstand Children's Clothing just released a limited collection of optimistic kids' T-shirts.

The indy label takes a design-centric approach to its products, often using hand-drawn lettering and bright, poppy colors. Their current offerings include artfully made shirts that say things like "Artist at Work," and "Be Awesome Today."

"Our goal is to bring a fun sense of optimism to the kids' clothing market," says Design Lead Daniel Hennessy. "We simply want to make artfully crafted clothes that help kids feel good about themselves."

Additionally, a percentage of the label's profits goes to support children's cancer research. Learn more about them at handstandclothing.com
