

Waterproof Smartphones becoming mainstream, reports Chinavasion

Leading Chinese Smartphones wholesalers, Chinavasion, see new waterproof smartphones becoming mainstream.

Rugged phones have long been popular among outdoor enthusiasts and sports adventurers, but for a long time these phones remained too niche for the typical Smartphone users. Typically, rugged smartphones were big and bulky phones covered in a thick protective rubber case with very many features and came at premium prices.

Ms Rose Li, PR Manager at Chinavasion, says, "Our sales reports, at Chinavasion, show an increasing demand for more portable, rugged devices and we have seen a growing trend towards more compact and aesthetically pleasing waterproof Smartphones."

This is great news for consumers who want the protection of a waterproof phone but prefer something that's more subtle and understated than the typical rugged cell phones.

One such device is the Blackview BV6000, this rugged phone is not much heavier than a standard Smartphone but comes with an impressive IP68 rating, as well as fairly high end specs and all at an affordable price.

Coming with the latest Android 6.0 Marshmallow operating system, this 4.7 inch phone boasts an Octa Core 2.0 GHz CPU, 3GB of RAM and Mali T860GPU, which lends the device an impressive performance capable of meeting the most demanding users' needs.

"A 4.7 inch screen may seem a little smaller than the norm but this keeps the phones profile compact enough for one handed use and means it can fit comfortably in a pocket, additionally it helps ensure the phone won't weigh you down, while remaining a good size for everything from gaming to watching movies, writing emails or navigating with the GPS.", Added Rose Li.

With an IP68 rating, Gorilla Glass 3 Screen protection and strong metal frame the Blackview BV6000, with its atmospheric pressure sensor, is certainly deserving of its rugged phone title.

"Blackview have been quick to tap into this growing market, first there was the BV5000 in October last year, which offered a new take on slim, unassuming rugged phones, following its huge success Blackview have brought us the BV6000." Advised, Ms. Li

Every aspect of this phone has been carefully thought out to bring a perfect balance between what people expect from a high end Smartphone while fulfilling the operational needs of those intrepid outdoor adventures.

At under $200 the BV6000 Android rugged phone is available at a very competitive price and joins a large range of other rugged phones and outdoor gadgets at Chinavasion.
