

Orange County Drug Rehab For Couples Struggling With Addiction

Broadway Treatment Center announced today the long awaited expansion of its couples addiction treatment program. Through their expanded couple's addiction program, Broadway Treatment Center will have the capacity to help many more couples find sobriety and live a life of integrity, love and companionship.

(PRWEB) July 05, 2016 -- Addiction is an equal opportunity destroyer of individuals as well as relationships. Most facilities that provide treatment for addiction to drugs or alcohol, as a general rule, discourage participants from bringing along their significant other, who also happens to be struggling with substance abuse issues. “We don’t understand the logic,” stated Broadway Treatment Center’s COO Shaun Lennert, “If two people are in a relationship, and having problems with substance abuse, how can you expect to effect positive outcomes without treating the whole problem? We’ve seen it many times, someone comes into our program, makes solid progress in their recovery, and then goes home to their spouse or significant other, whose still active in their addiction, just to start the whole unhealthy cycle all over again. We see it as highly unreasonable to treat only half of the problem, and expect long term results, it just doesn’t make sense.” The initial pilot program received an overwhelming response, and convinced the company to increase the effort to accommodate the demand. There are Orange County rehab centers that accept couples, but Broadway Treatment Center’s program is uniquely personalized for each couple, to help the individuals stabilize, and to heal and grow together as a couple. In order for a healthy relationship to flourish, the participants both need to be in a healthy emotional, psychological and physical state. Once both individuals are beyond the initial phases of recovery and have stabilized, they work with a licensed marriage and family therapist to identify behaviors and beliefs that contributed to their relationship’s deterioration. Through group therapy and individual counseling and educational sessions, couples are able to identify and replace the destructive conduct that sabotaged the relationship, and will learn to operate as a healthy support system for each other. Couples will learn independent recovery skills and build a solid foundation on which the relationship can grow as a mutually beneficial unit.
