

Public Records Search Engine People-Background-Check.com Combines State Court Records

Inconsistent States Standards Prevent Many Public Records from Updating the National Background Check System

People Background Check, the new public records background check service, has combined the public court records databases from every available state in the country. Online access to civil and criminal court records has been improving, however the states' disparate systems have made it impossible to find all the records on a single person. As part of the 25 billion records processed annually, People Background Check is committed to combining and organizing these records across states for easy online access.

In recent years, the state courts and individual jurisdictions in Washington, Pennsylvania, New York and many others have begun to make more public records available online. Texas plans to make its statewide court record database available online to the public within months. While some states offer free access to their records, many others charge a small fee. At first, these courts published civil court records only, but are now expanding to publish criminal records when sensitive personal information can be restricted. However, inconsistent standards, record formats and system designs have prevented a single convenient view from being widely available to the public.

At People-Background-Check.com, individual profiles on people are used to aggregate data from state, county and city records. These profiles include addresses, phone numbers, online mentions and compiled reports of court activity from across the country. This improved access to public records allow citizens to monitor the actions of the government including law enforcement and judicial systems.
