Radaris Improves Background Check Report Data Quality for Better Identity Verification

New Online Services, Markets and Social Environments Demand Consumers be More Cautious to Avoid Identity Theft, Confidence Scams and High Risk Situations

Radaris, the public records search engine, today announced more personal background information and public records have been added to its background check reports. The new data includes more detail on every criminal and civil record available, property transaction history and additional contact information for the subject and their family. The improved quality of these background check reports enable customers to perform better identity verification in any online or direct social interaction.

Each year, new online services, marketplaces and social environments demand a new degree of trust from consumers. From Airbnb host profiles to online dating profiles, the services offer some insight by way of reviews, but very little verified facts and information. Identity verification services are employed by many businesses to verify customer identities and protect them from fraud and other illegal uses. They are used by many retail merchants, social networks and online dating sites to prevent underage signups, money laundering and harassment. The three simple rules of online interactions are, 1) never send money to someone you meet online outside of the service's secure system, 2) never provide sensitive personal information directly to an unverified person, 3) always screen the person or vet the host of a property as the true owner, and require them to prove their identity, before committing time or money. Now, consumers can access the same background check information to safeguard their own personal interactions.

Radaris background checks offer identity verification more completely, more objectively and better by combining hundreds of public records sources into a single report. The new detailed information available in the latest data update and quality improvements brings personal identity verification to a higher level. These improved reports now include felony and misdemeanor criminal court records from national, state and county governments, social security number validations, education history, professional licenses, criminal court records, civil records, address history, family relations and personal connections whenever the information is available.
