Envirosight Hires Robert Lindner as Chief Operating Officer

Lindner to oversee service, warehousing, distribution, product support and new product development.

Randolph, NJ—December 26, 2018— Envirosight, the market leader in sewer inspection technology, has hired Robert Lindner to serve as Chief Operating Officer. In this role, Rob oversees the service department, warehousing, distribution and general operations for each Envirosight company while also leading product support and new product development.

From his time at Jarden Consumer Solutions (A.K.A. Sunbeam Products), a multinational consumer products brand where he served as Vice President of Global Quality and Consumer Services, Rob identified the importance of driving business growth through customer-centric values. At Envirosight, Rob is working to reinforce those values at every level of the business. His first initiative has been to benchmark turnover and response time within the Envirosight service department. Since then, Rob has turned his focus to integrating the Envirosight family of companies, bringing the sales expertise of Envirosight to its new acquisition, MyTana, while capitalizing on MyTana's manufacturing competencies.

"I'm a numbers guy," says Rob. "You can't effectively manage what you haven't measured. So, I'm bringing that mindset to Envirosight. We're working to boost efficiency in all aspects of our business and synergize the brands."

"I'm excited to have Rob on the team," says Richard Lindner, President of Envirosight. "Any company that's grown as rapidly as we have needs seasoned oversight in operations. In the beginning, we operated as many small companies must, with everyone wearing many hats. As we've grown, bringing on new product and new brands, functional specialization has become more important. Rob brings the structure and process focus that are essential to scaling a business."
