SKYSLOPE AND ZIPI TEAM UP TO GIVE BROKERS THE ADVANTAGE

At an event today SkySlope and Zipi announced and demonstrated, SkyZip, an app that enables brokers to integrate and digitize their process without change. Real estate technology integrations have traditionally been siloed and limited in functionality. By brokering native backend connections with real-time sync, SkyZip brings the benefits of a single application to its users without forcing them to change their workflows.

SkySlope is the number one transaction management platform for 65 percent of the top 20 largest brokerages in the nation. It is with these years of expertise in transaction management that Zipi has built on top of to provide the modern solution for real estate brokerage back-office management.

For brokers, the idea of piecing together multiple applications to accomplish a single task has always fallen short of the promise. With a relentless focus on customer support, SkySlope has set out to change the status quo and challenge their peers. Zipi shares in this value of uncompromising customer experience and drives this home with the release of SkyZip.

"Today we show, through the joining of these disparate platforms, how the future of real estate is not about control, but rather the ability to deliver meaningful solutions," said Jack Crane, CTO, Zipi. "SkySlope and Zipi have similar values to empower brokers wherever they are in their business and nothing can exemplify this better than our combined solution."

SkyZip is free to use and is currently in production being used by brokerages throughout the country. The two companies have entered into a long-term agreement and announced additional areas where broker value will be recognized.

At the event, both SkySlope and Zipi invited brokers, software vendors, and developers to join the open initiative to create additional value with their solutions. Those who are looking to collaborate and expand their ecosystems are encouraged to contact SkySlope or Zipi support.
