

JogoCast™ Soccer Lets you Share the Game from Anywhere and Follow it Live

A new iPhone app lets fans effortlessly follow their favorite local, recreational soccer teams live from anywhere.

Seattle, WA, September 6, 2012 - JogoCast (www.jogocast.com) announced today a new way of keeping track of soccer games in the age of social media. JogoCast Soccer provides a place for people to come together and support their local teams, even if they can't be there in person. Harnessing the power of social media, JogoCast lets users keep track of as much of or as little of the game as they want or even crowdsource the game tracking to other people at the game.

JogoCast was created to give local soccer fans the ability to share the game with family, friends, relatives, and alumni in an easy, fast, and fun way. Now viewing live games and keeping track of past games is as simple as starting JogoCast on an iPhone, Mac, or PC.

JogoCast Soccer: Real Time, it's About Time

Getting updates minutes or hours after something happens is fine for just following a game, but makes it impossible to participate. With JogoCast there is no delay in updates. Whenever anyone updates the game, the information is sent to everyone following the game at the same time. Real time updating allows everyone to experience the excitement of being part of the game no matter where they happen to be.

JogoCast not only updates itself, but allows users to send updates via Facebook, Twitter, email, and text messaging. Users can, with a tap of a button, send updates through any of these services so people can be kept up to date on the game even if they do not have a JogoCast account. This means that never again will anyone be left in the dark about how their team is doing.
