

2013 Adventure TEAM Challenge

Inclusive Multi-Sport Multi-Team Competition

World T.E.A.M. Sports

The 2013 Adventure TEAM Challenge from non-profit World T.E.A.M. Sports is a unique and powerful team event in the rugged desert of the Colorado Plateau's spectacular McInnis Canyon National Conservation Area. Envision a disabled veteran gliding across a mighty river on a plunging zip line, a paraplegic cranking a one-off hand cycle down a rocky trail, or a blind climber ascending sandstone slickrock. This is the Challenge, an inclusive, three-day multisport adventure race west of scenic Fruita, Colorado that teams able-bodied with disabled athletes. Team members work together to mountain bike, raft, run, zip line, climb and rappel, while navigating through unforgiving high desert terrain.

Competing teams in the Adventure TEAM Challenge are comprised of five athletes, of which at least two must be disabled - one being a wheelchair user or paraplegic. For many participants, the Challenge is the ultimate team adventure.

In its seventh year of competition, the 2013 Challenge course features thrilling stages in this secluded and beautiful environment. Seasoned adventure athletes, weekend warriors and desk jockeys desiring adventure will be tested through various outdoor activities. Teammates join together to innovate and solve problems through tackling physical challenges, digging deep within their mind, body and spirit to compete. Participants build camaraderie and celebrate diversity, cheering each other as they successfully negotiate each obstacle. Magnificent desert terrain, red sandstone canyons, icy snow-fed rivers and inspiring competitors create an unforgettable experience for all participants.

It shows others what can be done and gives them the confidence to do the unthinkable.
