Brady introduces confined space assessments and permitting for LINK360™ software
New software functionality offers paperless permit printing

MILWAUKEE, Wis. (September 6, 2013)—Brady has released its confined space assessments and permitting module for LINK360™ EHS and lean software platform. This update creates a paperless confined space assessment and permitting solution.

LINK360™ software's confined space functionality allows engineers to create assessments, route them for approval and store them online with accessibility for future review and modifications. It also allows personnel to fill out permits, request permitted entry, print permits for use and scan signed off permits online with anywhere accessibility for future reviews and audits.

In addition, customers can reduce ambiguity and time spent by creating an entry permit with only the necessary and accurate information. LINK360™ software also provides photos to help users visually identify entry points and hazards.

“The new confined space functionality for LINK360™ software helps our customers cross more issues off their list by providing more tools to help them better manage the environmental hazards and equipment efficiency,” says Marlon Davis, software business lead.
