STORY 2

SCHOOL CLIQUES

Read by: Minerva, 8 years old

Last month, 15-year-old Susan had to move from England to a small town in Portugal. She was so upset leaving all her best friends and teachers. She didn't want to move. She thought it was crazy to move to a country where she didn't know anyone, especially when she could not even speak the language! But she had no choice.

“Jealousy is the only reason why none of the girls wanted you to be in their cliques.”

Susan felt terrible for the difficult time she'd put herself and her Father through - just because of her need to be accepted in cliques. From that day forward, Maria and Susan were best of friends. All the other girls wanted them both to be in their cliques, but they decided cliques were no longer important. Only true friendship was.

READING QUESTIONS

* What do you think is the moral of the story?

1. Susan should have dyed her hair to be accepted.
2. Being accepted in a clique is more important than homework.
3. True friendship is more important than being part of a school clique.

Answer: 3. True friendship is more important than being part of a school clique.

ABOUT THE AUTHOR

Writer and Founder Jasmine Basha

Jasmine, an internationally published author and an avid lover of languages, learned five of them. A not-so-simple language - German, she learned quite easily and quickly from a 6-year-old child. With her degree in Child Psychology and an MBA, Jasmine came up with the idea of breaking away from the traditional methods and offering others the same opportunity to learn a language easily from a child.

Thus kid•toc was born.
