

AesthetiCare Cosmetic Surgery Institute Presents: What to do when Cosmetic Breast Surgery requires revision

Ronald Moser M.D. is the surgical director for AesthetiCare Cosmetic Surgery Institute based in Southern California. In practice for more than 26 years, he is a Fellow of The American Academy of Cosmetic Surgery, and a Diplomat of the American Board of Cosmetic Surgery and the American Society of Cosmetic Breast Surgery.

Most people have very good reasons for wanting cosmetic surgery.

Most have considered the risks, understand the procedures clearly, and given it careful thought. It is best to start when you are in good health, have good self-esteem, and understand the risks.

Dr. Ronald Moser has been a practicing cosmetic surgeon for more than twenty years in California. He has performed thousands of successful procedures, most of them at AesthetiCare Cosmetic Surgery Institute in the southern California beach community of San Juan Capistrano.

He has made a personal quest to give his patients all the information they need to make an informed decision about their cosmetic surgery options. Over the years, he has written detailed descriptions about the procedures that his patients are considering. He is especially concerned about patients who need cosmetic breast revision.

Cosmetic breast revision surgery is one of those sub-specialties that requires literally years of experience for a surgeon to do a good job. Although breast revision surgery is becoming more common due to the very large number of patients who have undergone cosmetic breast surgery during last 40 years, complications requiring revision are seen in less than two percent of those patients. It takes a busy, successful surgeon with at least 20 years in practice to have seen and treated enough patients to gather the experience to be able to address most all of the problems one may see in a lifetime of surgical practice.

Dr. Moser, who has been performing cosmetic breast surgery since 1987, has seen almost every complication imaginable. Dr. Moser has gained an outstanding nationwide reputation for treating even the most severe cosmetic breast surgery complications. Many of Dr. Moser's cosmetic breast surgery peers have referred to him their most complicated cases from around the country. Dr. Moser is an active instructor for other surgeons wanting to learn both the art and science of cosmetic breast surgery in general and treatment of post-operative complications in particular.

Among the most common reasons for cosmetic breast revision surgery are:

- Implant Malposition
- Capsular Contracture
- Saline Breast Implant Leaking
- Silicone Breast Implant Rupture
- Breast Implant Rippling
- Breast Implant Infection
- Implants that are either too small or too large
- Continued breast tissue sagging after a lift or reduction
- Nipples in the wrong place after breast lift or reduction

Surgery is not an exact science and unforeseen complications may occur. Problems like deflation of saline implants or rupture of silicone implants or other medical complication are infrequent, but on occasion they happen. If any problem arises, it is important to have a surgeon who stands with the patient and is willing to do what is necessary with a remedy.

“Patients who come to us find that they are getting a partner interested in aesthetics, care and their absolute satisfaction,” says Rosanna Bennett, a Cosmetic Surgery Counselor at AesthetiCare. “The Center places a high value on personal attention every step of the way - from initial consultation to recovery. And we back it up with a lifetime warranty; we’ll take care of you if problems like deflation or rupture of the implant, or other medical complication ever arise.”

She points out that AesthetiCare is one of the very few cosmetic surgical centers in the country that offers any kind of lifetime warranty:

- Limited charges for surgeon, patient care during revision visit (see website for details)
- No charge for anesthesia and operating room
- No charge for replacement breast implants for deflation or rupture.
- No charge for follow-up office visits.
- Consultation for life

“We have confidence in our doctors and our ability to deliver on the promise of aesthetics, care and complete satisfaction,” she concludes.
